Many people don't realize that leaf blowers are multi-tasking power tools that can be used all year round. The best leaf blowers are powerful enough to also blow grass, debris, and snow as well as leaves. This article will help explore the best five multitasking leaf blowers.Worx Turbine Corded Leaf BlowerAccording to bestreviews.com, the Worx Turbine Corded Leaf Blower is a best-seller. The fact that electric lawn tools are lighter and quieter make them a popular choice, and this blower weighs about six pounds. Also, this leaf blower has variable settings to allow you to adjust the speed depending on the job at hand. It also comes with a hyper-stream nozzle for powerful function and streamlined airflow. Its TURBINE fan makes it twice as fast as professional gas blowers, per bestreviews.com. The fact that it comes with a manufacturer's three-year warranty makes it a power tool that will be guaranteed for years to come.Hitachi RB24EAP Gas-Powered Leaf BlowerThis Hitachi leaf blower features an easy to operate two-finger throttle, air force of up to 170 MPH, tapered nozzle and low-emission engine technology, which means it's friendlier for the environment. It weighs a little more than eight pounds, making it easy to maneuver and considerably light for a gas-powered blower. It also comes with a seven year warranty. This blower is commercial grade, so it's great for larger jobs.Toro 51621 UltraPlus Leaf Blower VacuumThis Toro leaf blower has leaf shredding and vacuuming options as well. It comes with variable speed control settings. This model is Toro's highest performing blower and vacuum, according to bestreviews.com. It has an automatic oscillating blower functionality, making for a wider blowing area. You also have the option of buying an extra long extension cord for those jobs that require a farther reach.
•Craftsman CMEBL700 12-Amp Electric Leaf BlowerThis Craftsman leaf blower is a number one best-seller, according to Amazon.com. It has a maximum air force velocity of 230 mph and has high and low speed options. It is multi-functional as it both blows and mulches. Also, it comes with interchangeable nozzle connections depending on the job at hand.Milwaukee M18 FUEL Gen II Lithium-Ion Cordless Electric Leaf BlowerThis is a solid performing blower, says Leaf Blowers Direct. It features a variable two-speed control with low and high settings, as well as a variable trigger speed control. It is quieter and lighter than gas blowers and weighs just six pounds. At 120 mph velocity, it has the power to clear up to 15 feet of area. This leaf blower is good for yard maintenance for both the landscaping professional and regular homeowner. However, it comes with a few disadvantages. 3 Disadvantages of this Gutter Cleaning Attachment: First of all, it costs about $10 more than other models. In other words, for virtually the same accessory, you'll pay about 20% more than Toro or WORX. I'm not sure it's worth the higher price. Second, the curved tube at the end does not have a tapered design. Therefore, you don't get as much air pressure as you would from a nozzle with a narrowed end. For example, the Greenworks gutter kit and Shop Vac gutter cleaning attachment both feature tapered ends that increase air pressure. This feature may help with more stubborn or heavier debris. Third, the gutter blower attachment has 3 long sections, as compared to 4 or 5 sections on other models. As a result, you don't have as much versatility as far as length adjustment. The Good News: All that said, you get 10+ feet of length that you can add onto your blower to easily reach your gutters while standing on the ground. And as you'll see in the video clip below, the device appears to provide plenty of blowing power. Plus, the extension tube fits Stihl blowers perfectly, with a solid, secure fit. In other words, you don't have to deal with loose fittings that slip around or that require extra duct tape to stay in place. Stihl Leaf Blower Gutter Kit Review: The following video reviews the contents you get in the package, plus how to assemble them with a Stihl blower. Autumn leaves put on a beautiful display when they're on the trees, but once the leaves fall they create an unsightly mess. A leaf blower makes quick work of clearing a yard or patio area of the fall leaves, but it's useful for far more than just the seasonal cleanup. From dusting off a driveway to drying off a wet vehicle, this outdoor tool is useful year-round. Find our roundup of the best leaf blowers for your household use. MORE FROM CONSUMERSEARCH.COM Ah, the sounds of autumn. For some, they are so satisfying — a bite into a crisp apple, the crunch of fallen leaves. For others, the sounds that accompany autumn set their teeth on edge, especially when it comes to leaf blowers.Leaf blowers are gardening tools ratcheted up to 11. They are powered by electric or gasoline motors that propel air out of a nozzle to send leaves and grass cuttings flying. And, unlike lawn mowers, leaf blowers are probably the most villainized devices in the lawn care universe. Not only are they noisy and now used year-round, but for many, the level of noise they emit is unacceptable.In the mid-1970s, when leaf blowers became ubiquitous in the United States, two California cities adopted early bans of the equipment. Carmel-by-the-Sea and Beverly Hills labeled the leaf blowers a noise nuisance and banned their use, a move that has been followed by nearly two dozen other California municipalities, as well as hundreds of other cities across the U.S. to some degree, writes Charles Mostoller for the Miami Herald.What is it about leaf blowers that people hate? Is it the decibels? The constancy? Do leaf blowers pose real dangers to the health of users or others who happen to be within earshot? Increasingly, the answer appears to be "yes" — to all of the above.Let's Talk About Dust, BabyLeaf blowers may send leaves and lawn clippings for a ride, but the 180-280 mile per hour (290-451 kph) gusts also create a nose-clogging swirl of fungi, spores, herbicides and microbes. The resulting dust is so aggravating to people with allergies, asthma, bronchitis and other respiratory maladies that the American Lung Association recommends staying away from leaf blowers altogether.Plus, leaf blowers are noisy. When you engage in conversation, you are exposed to a noise level of about 60 decibels, according to the Center for Hearing and Communication. If you are strolling on a sidewalk and a car drives by, the noise registers at about 70 decibels. A leaf blower, even at 50 feet (15 meters) away, can be up to 75 decibels — and that can wreak havoc with your hearing. "Calling noise a nuisance is like calling smog an inconvenience. Noise must be considered a hazard to the health of people everywhere," former U.S. Surgeon General William H. Stewart told the Miami Herald.Any noise above 75 decibels risks causing hearing damage, yet many people are exposed to a steady stream of sounds that range beyond safe levels, according to the World Health Organization. This is true of people who use leaf blowers, which can reach decibels well into the 90s and above up close, as well as people who hear them by being in proximity.And then there's the air pollution. Operating a commercial leaf blower for one hour emits as much smog-forming pollution as driving a 2016 Toyota Camry from Los Angeles to Denver, which is about an 1,100-mile (1,770-kilometer) trip. Running a solitary leaf blower for 12 months would be like driving 80 vehicles for 12,500 miles (20,116 kilometers).Most leaf blowers use a two-cycle engine, which is known for being lightweight and inexpensive. However, two-stroke engines require a mixture of gasoline and oil to operate, because unlike more complex engines, they don't have separate chambers for fuel and lubricants. When the engine is operated, approximately one-third of the combined fuel and oil mixture is wasted, which means that carbon monoxide, nitrous oxide and hydrocarbons are released into the air.These three toxins are some of the main culprits in air pollution from leaf blowers. Carbon monoxide helps form smog. Nitrous oxide is a prime ingredient in acid rain and has been linked to global warming. Hydrocarbons are cancer-causing organic compounds that also contribute to smog formation.Misunderstood or Misophonia?Misophonia is a relatively newly classified condition in which people are angered by body sounds like chewing, swallowing, knuckle-cracking or breathing. Although leaf blowers aren't mentioned in the diagnosis parameters, it does stand to reason that misophonia may be related — even if distantly — to people's dislike of noisy garden equipment because they are extra sensitive to sound. And it often begins in childhood."I was really sensitive to dogs barking and I hated dogs mostly because of the noise. Everyone would be like, "Calm down,"" a magazine editor told New York Magazine on the condition of anonymity. "I would just say you don't understand; this noise is actually killing me. It's killing me and I feel like I am going mad."Preliminary data shows that misophones may have a hypersensitive connection between the auditory system and the limbic system, which is the part of the brain that is responsible for creating emotions. It's so much a part of life for misophones that they can be shocked when others don't feel or react the same way to certain noises.Moving beyond misophonia to the general population doesn't alleviate the leaf blower irritation situation, either. Erica Walker, a doctoral student at Harvard University's Chan School of Public Health, discovered that it is far less irritating to create sound than it is to hear it. In a survey of 1,050 residents in more than a dozen Boston neighborhoods, Walker found the majority of respondents said they couldn't control or get away from noises like leaf blowers, and they believed that no one really cared that it annoyed them. What's more, leaf blowers have become an integral part of commercial lawn care, an industry that's part-and-parcel of most residential neighborhoods.So, don't expect the noise to abate in most places any time soon — while leaf blower may sound like fingernails across a chalkboard to you, for the businesses that rely on them for a portion of their livelihood, it is probably music to the ears.
